

To whom it may concern

Regards for the day,

I would like to thank first of all for giving all individuals an opportunity in order to give reviews regarding changes in immigration law and rule.

Nobody knows what type of impacts they are going to cause in future for the businesses however at the present moment they are not in the favour of people who are here for long terms such as five six or more years.

The situation at the ground is critical for the skilled migrants since the new rules are introduced. It takes time and efforts to get experience and skills in any particular profession, Nobody is born skilled, however along the side proposed changes in the wages/ salary for hiring migrants by the government has been changed for several times for last two years and the rule describes the higher wages you get it will describe how skilled a person is.

The changes in immigration rule had been making constantly difficult for people who are studying or working here for their career development. The careers and work experience they got is a New Zealand based, if a person has spent more than five year here should have exemption from these new rules otherwise it's going to be a back bone breaking for their careers and for future of their professional, personal and family lives. They have already given their best and most of their efforts for the nation's development.

There would not be any negative impact of giving exemptions for the immigrants living in New Zealand for more than Five years as they are New Zealand working bodies, if they have to leave country that can be negative impact on the businesses. Rest it will be all up to the Ministries to decide. Many thanks

Regards
