Good afternoon,

We are of the understanding that current RFA's giving advice in the areas of Mortgages, Life Insurance and Fire & General, will be expected to be have a university degree / complete level 6 qualifications in order to operate under the new regulations and proposed changes to the Code.

We believe this to be restrictive to allowing current RFA's to be able to operate under the suggested changes to the code and the ability for them to still give advice to their clients as they have in the past.

We do support an increase in qualifications moving forward and believe that Level 5 New Zealand Certificate should be suffice for achieving this and ensuring that the consumer is well advised like they have been now and will be in the future.

Kind regards

Simon Fisher
